

Create a Map and Write a Story

There are times when a story may take place in several locations. As you write your story, your character will be moving between the places you have created. It is helpful if you draw a map of your story. The map will help you to visualize your character moving around in the scene and the world that you have created. As an example, Tofu's bedroom is in a cubbyhole up the wall from the kitchen of his house. If you were writing about Tofu going to his bedroom you wouldn't say that he crawled down the wall to his room. Imagine the world of your character and draw a map of their world. Then, write a story based on your map.
